Q1	At a national-level technical festival, you spot a recruiter from your dream company. You want to introduce yourself but are unsure how they will respond. You feel uncertain about what to say, and you know you have only a few minutes to make an impression. How would you apply Uncertainty Reduction Theory to reduce initial awkwardness and build a positive professional connection?	1	5
Q2	In your first job, you notice that some colleagues are helpful but expect you to return favors immediately, while others share knowledge without asking for much in return. Based on Social Exchange Theory, how would you choose which workplace relationships to strengthen in order to maximize your long-term growth?	1	5
Q3.	You are asked to propose an innovative solution for improving students' attendance in classes and encouraging their participation in co- curricular activities as well. Before speaking in the meeting, it is expected that you brainstorm key points and structure your idea logically. How will the ideation and encoding stages of the communication process help you prepare a clear and impactful message in this scenario? Also, make a well labeled diagram of the process of communication.	1	5
